WHAT TO DO WHEN YOU SEE A BLIND PERSON

• When addressing a blind person, identify yourself immediately so that there is no mystery as to your identity.

• When leaving the presence of a blind person, say so; don’t place them in an embarrassing situation by just walking away.

• When guiding a blind person, offer your arm for assistance. A blind person can anticipate your movements by walking slightly behind you.

• Offer understanding, consideration, and friendship to a blind person—not pity!

• When showing a blind person to a chair, guide their hand to the backrest of the chair.

• When communicating with a blind person, speak in a normal tone directly to the person, not to the sighted guide or other companion of the blind person.

• Offer assistance when you see a blind person attempting to cross a busy intersection, but don’t be discouraged or offended by a “No thank you.” It could be that the person is familiar with the surroundings and feels secure.

• Don’t distract a guide dog from its main purpose of safely leading its master. Never pet a guide dog or offer it food.

For more information or to support America’s blinded veterans, visit www.bva.org

Advocating for blinded veterans since 1945